IS YOUR OFFICE FENG-SHUI FRIENDLY?

Do you find it difficult to focus while at work? Are you setting goals, but struggling to get work handed in on time? Do your eyes constantly wander to the clock counting the seconds to quitting time? If these and other issues plague you while on the job then your office might not be Feng Shui friendly. According to Leslie and Mark Jacobson, proprietors of Feng Shui Consultants of Boca Raton, if put into correct use the ancient Chinese practice can have an immense and positive affect on your life. The brother and sister duo each posses master degrees in counseling in addition to being certified in Feng Shui. In teaching people to mirror their inner space with their outer space, the Jacobsons have found a new and exciting way to help others. They believe that Feng Shui and counseling go hand-in-hand as each practice strives to bring balance and harmony into peoples' lives.

Translating into "wind" and "water", Feng Shui is rooted in the Taoist belief that every object in the world has a relationship with the space around it. Proper placement of objects, based on Feng Shui principles, can facilitate positive energy. The bagua is the heart and soul of Feng Shui. An octagonal map, the bagua designates corners to love/relationships, knowledge/skills/self-cultivation, career, fame/reputation, helpful people/travel, family/health, wealth/prosperity and children/creativity.

The bagua can apply to any area of the work place from the boss' office to the break room. Because this is the first thing people see when they walk through the door, the entrance and reception area of an office is of great symbolic importance and can set the tone for the rest of the work space. Objects, such as the pictures on the wall and the furniture in the room, should be in tandem with the company's vision and goals and the company logo should be prominently displayed. Feng Shui principles also maintain that the boss' office should be centrally located so there is no question as to who's in charge. Clutter should be nonexistent as it creates obstacles. A well organized, clutter free desk opens the mind to new, creative ideas and allows employees to focus solely on the task at hand. Individual offices should have personal touches, but décor and knick-knacks should mirror the overall priorities of the company. The Jacobsons suggest that any changes be made slowly so the ensuing results can be monitored closely. Goals should be clear and realistic and the focus should always be on promoting harmony and positive energy.
